Murder charges: 141 counts

Prosecutors cast wide net against suspects in Hadiya Pendleton slaying

Chicago Tribune

When the suspects in the high-profile slaying of 15-year-old Hadiya Pendleton stepped up to the bench Thursday for what was supposed to be a routine arraignment, the judge announced an eye-popping figure that seemed anything but typical.

CHICAGO VIOLENCE
ONE CITY UNDER THE GUN

The alleged gunman, Michael Ward, faced 141 counts of first-degree murder—in a case with one fatality.

The number raised eyebrows in the courtroom and prompted Ward's attorney to blast Cook County State's Attorney Anita Alvarez for what he said was grandstanding in a case that has brought international attention—and the focus of the White House—to Chicago's scourge of gun violence.

"I want to ask [Alvarez]: 'Why are you doing this?' " attorney Jeffrey Granich said to a throng of news media at the Leighton Criminal Court Building after Ward and co-defendant Kenneth Williams entered formal pleas of not guilty. "It's ridiculous and stupid. It's an extremely cheap way of getting attention."

Alvarez's spokeswoman, Sally Daly, responded Thursday night to the criticism, saying, "It's simply not true at all."

"It is common for this office to bring all of the applicable charges at this juncture of the case, and that's what was done here," she said.

Daly would not elaborate on the specific counts against Ward, but legal experts and former prosecutors told the Tribune it's typical to use the preliminary stage of indictment as a catch-all, especially when evidence still is coming in and a case remains fluid. The strategy is to capture as many theories about a crime as possible, then drop counts that don't fit the evidence before trial, they said.

A number of recent cases—both high-profile investigations and those that flew under the media radar—seem to bear that out. When William Balfour was charged in 2008 in the sensational slayings of singer Jennifer Hudson's mother, brother and nephew, a grand jury returned an indictment that included 53 counts of murder. He eventually was tried and convicted on 13 of those counts as well as other charges of home invasion and kidnapping.

Prosecutors have said Ward, 18, confessed to police that he and Williams, 20, were driving around Jan. 29 looking for rival gang members to shoot when they passed Harsh Park and spotted Hadiya's group, relaxing after final exams and taking shelter from the rain under a canopy. After Williams handed him a gun, Ward crept up on the group and fired six shots, prosecutors said.

Hadiya, a sophomore at King College Prep who had recently performed with her high school band at President Obama's inauguration festivities, was fatally shot in the back. Two other students were wounded, while 10 people who were part of the group escaped injury, prosecutors said.

Nathaniel Pendleton (center), father of slain 15-year-old Hadiya Pendleton, arrives Thursday at the Leighton Criminal Court Building. State's Attorney Anita Alvarez on Thursday charged Michael Ward, a suspect in Hadiya's death, with 141 counts of first-degree murder. JOSÉ M. OSORIO/TRIBUNE

PENDLETON FAMILY RESPONSE

After Thursday's brief court hearing, Hadiya Pendleton's father, Nathaniel Pendleton, told reporters the arraignment marked the beginning of "a long road we gotta cross," but he expressed confidence justice would be done on his daughter's behalf. "We're just trying to make good things happen from something bad," he said after noting that his wife and he are starting a foundation to encourage non-violence and combat gun violence.

13 entertaining 2013 surprises

Matt Pais
» @mattpais

Sometimes the predictable revolving door of lousy pop culture deserves the eye rolls it generates—unless you totally loved the latest "Die Hard" sequel. In many ways, though, the first three months of 2013's entertainment offerings have been consistently surprising and frequently awesome. Why? These 13 reasons.

1. The best movie of the year so far stars Selena Gomez and Vanessa Hudgens.
No. "Spring Breakers" didn't come from the team that makes Adam Sandler's annual garbage, but there was little reason to believe writer-director Harmony Korine's dangerous hallucination through the debaucheries of St. Petersburg, Fla., would be so fascinatingly intoxicating.

2. Fall Out Boy played at Subterranean and has a new album on the way.
The biggest Chicago rock band of the past decade emerged from an indefinite hiatus to perform on a stage much smaller than they're used to—and will do it big May 16 at Riviera after releasing "Save Rock and Roll" in April.

3. Pairing Tina Fey and Paul Rudd ("Admission") and re-teaming Ryan Gosling and Emma Stone ("Gangster Squad") unfortunately didn't work at all.
It's as if movies are more than a result of who's in them. Who knew?

4. Pitchfork's top line looks better than Lolla's.
It's been years since that was the case. This summer, Bjork, R. Kelly and Belle and Sebastian wipe the floor with Mumford and Sons, Vampire Weekend and The Killers. (Which isn't difficult.)

5. James Franco delivered an awful performance and one of his best performances—in the span of two weeks.
The Oscar-nominated actor ("127 Hours") was 100 percent wrong for "Oz the Great and Powerful." As a tattooed rapper named Alien with cornrows and metal teeth in "Spring Breakers," he was brilliant.

6. The best album of the year so far is country.
I know, I know, "I don't like country music" either. But listen to Kacey Musgraves' "Same Trailer Different Park" and tell me you aren't hooked. Hey hey hey—don't just look at the album cover.

7. For the first time in a long time, "How I Met Your Mother" is funny and moving.
For about three years, fans have just wanted to meet the freakin' mother already. Now suddenly, with a not-necessarily-welcome additional season on tap, the show (Robin) sparkles again.

8. Justin Timberlake released a new album—and appeared on Jimmy Fallon for five consecutive nights.
After almost seven years of non-musicality, JT returned in a big way with the solid "The 20/20 Experience" and a mix of great performances/uninhibited comedy. Respect.

9. Charlie Sheen starred in a movie, with another to come.
"A Glimpse Inside the Mind of Charles Swan III" was a zero-star atrocity that most people don't know existed, and no way anyone thinks "Scary Movie 5" looks good. Justice.

10. The talk of the NCAA tournament is the best-ever 15 seed and its millionaire, model-marrying coach.
In a generally underwhelming year for March Madness, Florida Gulf Coast has provided enough excitement for three tournaments. Appreciate the trip to Dunk City while it lasts.

11. Seth MacFarlane hosted the Oscars, was a huge jackass and some people liked it.
Most people, myself included, didn't. But how transparent does misogyny have to be for people to get upset?

12. The Hawks went 24 games without a regulation loss, and the Bulls ended the Heat's 27-game winning streak.
Miami deserves credit for racking up those wins. So do the Bulls, baby, for doing the "impossible" without Derrick or Joakim. And showing we only stand for hometown streaks around here.

13. There was a movie called "The Last Exorcism Part II."
The absurdity is self-explanatory.

HOW NU STUDENTS HELPED SHEDD'S PENGUINS GET THEIR SWAGGER BACK

Northwestern students Karis Shang (left) and Olivia Gann visit Shedd Aquarium to see their bootie design in action.

ZBIGNIEW BZDAK/ TRIBUNE PHOTOS

Chicago Tribune

The Shedd Aquarium had a problem: From time to time, its penguins did not have happy feet.

The birds, particularly the older ones, developed bumblefoot—uncomfortable lesions that can be caused by standing too long on a rough surface. The Shedd tried using a sandal-like shoe to protect the penguins' feet while veterinarians treated the problem, but that led to another challenge: The birds limped and tripped while waddling in the shoe.

Seeking a fresh solution, Shedd experts turned for help to Northwestern University and its McCormick School of Engineering. As early as freshman year, Northwestern engineering students are required to work with clients to solve real problems.

Students last fall designed the "Tuxedo," a six-winged, waterproof bandage that wraps around a penguin's foot and between its toes and provides a flexible solution that doesn't cause the bird to trip.

The orthopedic bootie—akin to a fancy Band-Aid—is the latest of about a dozen devices the students have designed over the past seven years to solve various challenges at the Shedd, thanks to a unique partnership between the two Chicago institutions.

"When the birds get [bumblefoot], it is a hard thing to treat," said Ken Ramirez, the Shedd's executive vice president of animal care and training. "But you aren't going to find a major company to design a penguin shoe."

Several times a year, Northwestern faculty members meet with aquarium staff to hear about the Shedd's latest challenges and discuss which ones the students might try to solve. In the past, students have designed a carrier for an ultrasound device, a machine that can deliver anesthesia to fish electronically and a decompression chamber for seahorses.

Students in the class this semester are working on "otter enrichment"—designing interactive activities to challenge otters.

The freshmen assigned to the penguin shoe project in the fall were given few instructions: Design a waterproof shoe that can protect a penguin's foot while it heals, and allow it to walk, swim and stand comfortably.

On a recent afternoon at the Shedd, Lana Vanagasem, who oversees the Shedd's penguins, demonstrated how it works, wrapping the bandage around Penguin 303's foot and between its three toes.

The bandage is made of kinesiology tape, and a circular piece of neoprene foam is attached in the middle to cover and protect a sore.

Other than some wiggling as the bandage was put on his foot, Penguin 303 didn't seem to mind it.

"It is like a comfy pair of slippers," Ramirez said.

The students made a cookie cutter-like prototype so Shedd staff can cut out as many of the bandages as it needs over the years. Since the class designed the device last semester, no Shedd penguins have had bumblefoot.

Northwestern sophomore Karis Shang smiled as she watched the penguin waddle around in her team's winning design, made of purple tape in honor of Northwestern's color.

But when asked whether the successful design earned her an A in the class, she demurred.

"We did well," she said.

DID YOU KNOW?

The first device Northwestern students designed through their partnership with the Shedd was the "endo-grabber," used to retrieve a foreign object like a pebble from an animal's stomach. It once was mailed to a California aquarium to remove a child's shoe from inside an alligator.

Jumbotron? Try megascreen

Display would be triple the size of Cubs' historic scoreboard, sources say

Chicago Tribune

A key sticking point in the negotiations over the rehab of Wrigley Field is whether to allow the Cubs to erect a giant video screen within the Friendly Confines. The team is seeking a 6,000-square-foot display that would be about triple the size of the iconic center field scoreboard, sources say.

According to the sources who are familiar with detailed proposals being discussed during the now-daily talks, the debate is focused more on the size and placement of a Jumbotron-like screen than on whether it would be allowed at all—the Ricketts family that owns the Cubs is rejecting anything smaller than 6,000 square feet.

"We are exploring adding a video board at Wrigley Field as part of opportunities to increase revenues for the baseball club," Cubs spokesman Julian Green said. "One of the points at issue is the size."

Sources say the video screen's location also is a significant issue. Since the Cubs have not suggested moving the center-field scoreboard, which is protected under Wrigley's designation as a Chicago landmark, a video screen would have to be placed behind the bleachers in either right or left field. A video screen as large as the Cubs are proposing could potentially block views from rooftop businesses that line the stadium's outfield.

A proposed video screen at Wrigley Field would be three times the size of the park's historic scoreboard. JOHN J. KIM/TRIBUNE

Rooftop owners have said that any new billboards or video screens that obstruct their views would violate a 20-year contract they signed with the team in 2004, and some have threatened to sue the Cubs.

The current scoreboard, which was built at Wrigley Field in the late 1930s, is about 2,025 square feet, according to a city landmarks report. That would be dwarfed by the 6,000-square-foot video screen envisioned by the Cubs. According to sources, city officials have suggested a video screen of about half that size, but the Cubs have said no. The Cubs' Green declined to get into specifics about the talks involving the video screen.

The scoreboard sought by the Cubs would not be the biggest in the majors by far. The Seattle Mariners recently installed one measuring 11,425 square feet.

A handful of other issues require resolution in the Wrigley negotiations, including the number of Cubs night games, before the owners are willing to begin a $300 million restoration of the ballpark, which will turn 100 years old in 2014.

The Ricketts family has been aggressively pursuing a Wrigley Field renovation since buying the team and ballpark in 2009 in a deal valued at $845 million. (Tribune Co., parent of the Tribune and RedEye, still owns 5 percent of the team.)

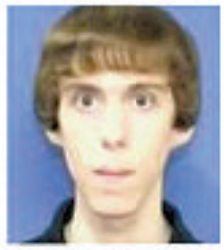
Newtown gunman's home stocked with swords, guns



Adam Lanza

5 MERIDEN, Conn. The gunman who killed 20 children and six adults at a Connecticut elementary school fired 154 rounds in less than 5 minutes, selecting high capacity magazines from a home arsenal stocked with swords, knives and a cache of guns, officials said.

Investigators also found a newspaper clipping about a mass shooting in the home that Adam Lanza shared with his mother, along with a gun safe in his bedroom, receipts from shooting ranges and National Rifle Association certificates for both of them, according to court papers released Thursday.

To carry out the second deadliest school shooting in U.S. history, the 20-year-old Lanza used 30-round magazines at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, said Connecticut Gov. Dannel Malloy after the previously sealed searches of Lanza's car and home were made public.

"We now know that he left the lower capacity magazines at home," Malloy said in a statement. "This is exactly why we need to ban high capacity magazines and why we need to tighten our assault weapons ban."

The pale yellow two-story suburban colonial house where Lanza lived is directly across the street from the home of Dylan Hockley, 6, who died in his teacher's arms during the massacre. The Hockley family since has moved to another part of town.

The searches showed that Lanza had many weapons besides the AR-15-type assault rifle and two handguns used in the Dec. 14 attack.

The rampage started at the family home, where authorities say he shot dead his mother, Nancy Lanza, and then drove to the school he once attended. There he killed the 20 children and six staff members, and then himself.

For some in the tight-knit southern New England town, the release of the new details only inflamed emotional wounds.

"We struggle every day to stay on the path of recovery and every bit of information that becomes part of the public discourse holds a potential hurt for a family who has already suffered immeasurable harm," Newtown First Selectman E. Patricia Llodra said.

THE NIU ARTICLE

Connecticut authorities on Thursday released a trove of court documents about Adam Lanza. Among them were lists of items found in searches of a car and the home he shared with his mother. Items found included a copy of a New York Times article from Feb. 18, 2008, about a mass school shooting four days prior at Northern Illinois University, that killed five people and wounded 21 more.

take meh out to the ballgame

It's gonna be a long 2013 for baseball fans—if RedEye's simulation is correct

By Ryan Smith | FOR REDEYE

Never mind misery. Meh loves company in the case of the 2013 Cubs and White Sox. Both of Chicago's baseball franchises will finish this season with subpar 79-83 records and again sit at home in October.

That's according to a simulation conducted by RedEye on Sony's "MLB '13 The Show" on PlayStation 3. Here's a month-by-month breakdown:

April Cubs catcher Welington Castillo tears a ligament in his finger on opening day and is out one to two months. Not a good omen. The rest of the month doesn't hold much better news—even with a three-game winning streak, the Wrigley Field dwellers finish 10-18, already 12 games back of red-hot Milwaukee. The Sox? Someone forgot to tell Jake Peavy and Gavin Floyd (a combined 0-7) how to pitch and the Sox are a game worse than the Cubs.

May Things aren't looking up for the South Siders, as they follow a stretch of winning eight of 10 with losing three straight to the Cubs. Meanwhile, the Cubs get more bad injury news in the form of a herniated disc suffered by Matt Garza, who had been the Cubbies' best pitcher thus far.

June Two teams, Philadelphia and Washington, try to trade for Sox backup infielder Josh Bell, who is hitting .195 in limited time. Do they know something we don't? Meanwhile, the Sox inch into respectability with a winning record in June but are still 11½ games behind American League-leading Detroit. The Cubs also have creeped back toward .500 but remain mired in fourth in a tough NL Central.

July With Phillies shortstop Jimmy Rollins out with an injury, Starlin Castro leads off the National League All-Star lineup. No Sox player gets close to being voted in, but because of the one All-Star per team rule, good ol' Paulie Konerko lands a spot on the AL roster. Meanwhile, the Cubs and Sox enjoy decent, but not great, months of July. Second place in the AL Central means little for the Sox when they're 13 games behind Detroit.

August Adam Dunn suffers a "head contusion" (whatever that is) during a wicked collision at home plate and will miss a month. The Sox, meanwhile, injure their chances at a wild card spot by finishing August on a seven-game losing streak. With a 64-71 record, they're a long shot. The Cubs are hanging on to fourth place in their division.

September This is certainly not the best of times for Castillo. The boo-boo-prone catcher reinjures his finger and is out another few weeks. The Cubs end the season 79-83, an improvement from the 2012 team that lost 100 games. For the Sox, their 79-83 record feels like a disappointment for a team that narrowly missed the playoffs last season. But they're always next year, right? Right? Sigh.

Real isn't always better

I'm not typically into video games, but I did break down and buy "MLB '13 The Show." I'm excited enough about baseball's return to want to rush it a little.

Turns out video game baseball has come a long way since "RBI Baseball" for Nintendo. The simulated virtual reality of this new generation of games is now close enough to actually sitting and watching a baseball game to officially introduce a Chicago-friendly element to the equation: schadenfreude.

I advocate supplementing your baseball experience with one of these games to anybody rooting for a Chicago team for one reason: control. If Dale Sveum is overplatooning his players, you can call Bryan LaHair back from Japan and force him to hit against lefties. You can use the easy-to-master batting controls to build up Alfonso Soriano's stats until he's trade-able.

You can force Gordon Beckham to swing for contact, or Adam Dunn to take pitches, or Carlos Marmol to throw strikes. You decide.

Want Alexei Ramirez to set a major-league record for bunts in a season? Go for it. Heck, you can get A.J. Pierzynski back via trade and send Tyler Flowers to the minors. Just for fun.

You can put the starting pitcher in at DH. Why not? Want Dewayne Wise to qualify for best staff ERA? Do it.

When you make these decisions, you do so within the course of what looks very much like a real baseball game, with non-reaction shots of stoic managers, strikeout victims dickering with umpires, and commentators bantering insipidly as the closer juggles the rosin bag.

One time while I was playing the opposing team sent out a mop-up reliever, and he dropped his glove on the way to the mound as if in a plea for my sympathy.

The level of detail is almost as intense as in the real weird, wonderful game, but thankfully for Chicago fans, the level of reality is way less.

I recommend picking up a copy once your favorite team is out of the running. So about mid-May.

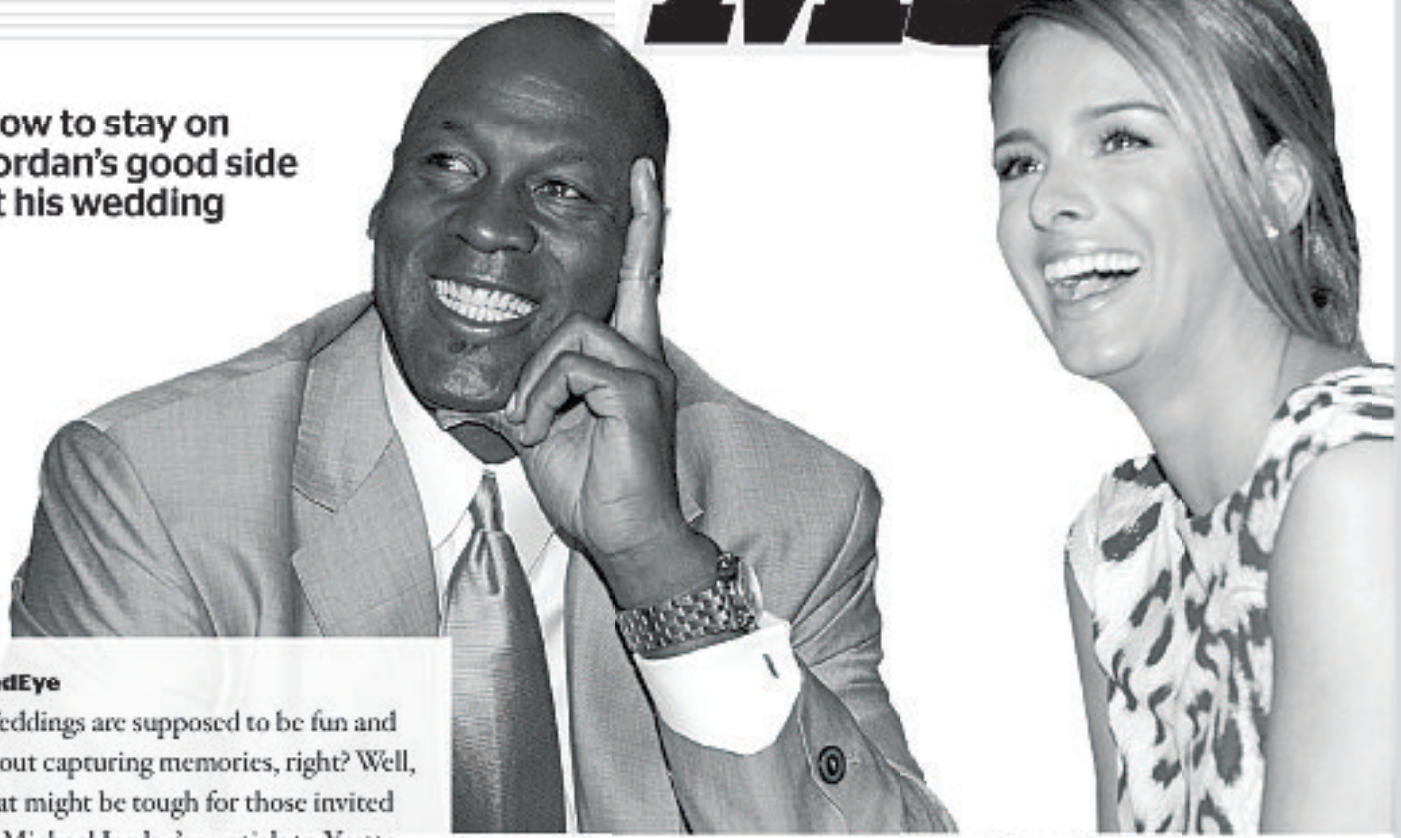
How to stay on Jordan's good side at his wedding



Michael Jordan and fiancee Yvette Prieto. GETTY IMAGES FILE

RedEye

Weddings are supposed to be fun and about capturing memories, right? Well, that might be tough for those invited to Michael Jordan's nuptials to Yvette Prieto.

According to the Chicago Sun-Times, the invitations to Jordan's wedding ask that guests not share any details, and that they leave their cameras and cellphones at home.

We figure these other guidelines are important for those who score an invitation.

DO

- Offer drinks and gifts to Jordan and his bride-to-be. MJ is used to people passing to him.
- Dunk something. Your bread in marinara sauce. The photographer in the punch bowl. Just dunk it, baby.
- Bring some basketball prospects or draft picks. His Charlotte Bobcats are BAD and can use the help!

DON'T

- Bring MJ's high school coach. Or Bryon Russell. Or Jerry Krause. Boy, does he hate those guys.
- Hog the mic during a speech. When you upstage His Airness, you get a black eye. (See: Steve Kerr)
- Gamble with Jordan. It's a losing proposition, and you're not worth $650 million like he is.

They're back ... almost

The Blackhawks tweeted a photo of Patrick Sharp and Marian Hossa on Thursday. That's the good news. The bad news is neither will play Friday against Anaheim. Good thing the NHL playoffs don't start for another month or so.

THE MOUTHWATCH

If you can't beat him, sign him.

That's what we're down to in Chicago. There is no way, healthy or not, Derrick Rose or not, that the Bulls can play with the Miami Heat. So, it gets real simple:

At the end of 2013-14, LeBron James can opt out of his deal with the Heat. That's when the Bulls come knocking with a) Healthy Derrick Rose b) Tons of cash and cap space c) Maybe another stud.

Who that other guy is, I don't know. Hey, I'm not the minutia guy; I'm the big picture dreamer.

All I know is right now, we're not even close—and neither is the rest of the NBA. You can't outcoach talent at this level. Sad, isn't it?

What's not sad is how Phil Emery has quickly gotten the Bears quicker and younger at linebacker.

Brian Urlacher? Yes, I will miss him. In particular, the 2006 him. Sorry, but I'll take the cold-hearted surgeon approach over the rah-rah emotional stuff any day. Now we draft whoever we want! Maybe even another linebacker! Let's live a little!

Enough nonsense—30-degree temps and gloomy skies can mean only one thing. It's baseball season! I love the Sox except for ... John Danks. I'm still wondering why we gave Mark Buehrle's money to him.

To the North Side, yes, another year of rebuilding. If this were an actual building, we'd still be working the foundation for the league's fourth most valuable franchise. Wow, imagine how valuable they would be if it wasn't: Rooftop owners 83 percent, Cubs 17 percent of rooftop revenues. How about we flip that?

Regardless, another year of pain but we see signs of improvement: Players doing the little things, smart drafting, player development.

Enough to sit outside and freeze for?

No, of course not. Enjoy opening day.

We picked the best answers from our Twitter followers. It's that simple. What are you waiting for?

1	Why did Lance Louis leave the Bears for the Miami Dolphins?	You know that nice day in Chicago when everybody's outside? Miami's like that 7,000 days in a row.	He chose South Beach over South Side, palm trees over deep freeze, Marino over marinara ... (I can keep going)	Either money or a greater sense of self-worth. I'll go with money.	Weather.	@JBDstarwars Because he is the LeBron James of football guards. Had to take his talents to South Beach!
2	How will the Cubs and Sox spend their final weekend before the season?	Probably making October vacation plans. When you book in advance, you save $.	Watching the sunset one last time. Then Cubs say they'll keep in touch with Sox, but you know they'll drift apart.	White Sox: Prepping for Opening Day. Cubs: Prepping for 2015.	Easter egg hunt!	@JetSetVegas Stocking up on magazines. Waiting till next year gets boring.
3	What would Ozzie Guillen tweet to Phil Jackson?	Something in charmingly broken English. It's OK, Ozzie. You've only been in America for 40 years.	"They cant stop me Phil i am in the ^%&#@ Zen!!!"	"Pardon me, do you have any Grey Poupon? #kidding #WAZZUP!"	"Someways, I miss reinsdort, don't you?"	@Taege "why you leaf Chicago? dees a kine of plaec youre career make you. #beisbol"
4	What does Derrick Rose mean when he says he'll "be out there attacking" upon his return?	He's gonna fight Carlos Boozer for deceiving him with that painted on hair last year.	He's going to do some real damage on the rim once the season's over.	Please. Just. Shut. Up. Or. Play. Good. Lord. This. Is. Taking. Forever.	He'll be aggressive on offense next year.	@JetSetVegas Random, unexplained throat chops to Benny the Bull during timeouts.
5	How can the second weekend of March Madness top the first?	Halftime spelling bee for the players to see how serious they are about academics. With Ozzie Guillen as judge.	Tracy Swartz just tweeted me to tell me she's switching from the Gators to FGCU. Wait, that's not "FGCU" ...	Derrick Rose makes his debut with Florida Gulf Coast.	With Duke losing, of course.	@DaSignGod If the lights go out just after halftime on every game!

The Nerdist
9 p.m. Saturday, BBC America

Talking Dead
9 p.m. Sunday, AMC

Chris Hardwick is a busy guy. He runs the popular podcast and website The Nerdist and travels the country doing stand-up. Last fall, his "Talking Dead," the popular aftershow in which he and guests dissect each episode of "The Walking Dead," grew to an hourlong chat fest.

As if Hardwick doesn't have enough on his plate, his "The Nerdist" specials on BBC America have been transformed into a weekly variety/interview show.

"I'm pretty good with time management," he told me earlier this week. "I'm a color-coded calendar guy ... I know 'Talking Dead' works on Sundays, BBC America works on Saturdays, the podcasts record during the week, script meetings happen during the week, stand-up's at night.

"Don't get me wrong, it's a seven-day work week, but it's all fun stuff. And everything is very modular in that way."

With the series premiere of "The Nerdist" on Saturday that will focus on BBC America's Supernatural Saturday lineup of "Doctor Who" and "Orphan Black" earlier in the night, and the season finale of AMC's "Talking Dead" on Sunday after the season finale of "The Walking Dead," I asked Hardwick a very nerdy question: If you were transported to a horrific world where you could watch just one of two shows, "Doctor Who" or "The Walking Dead," which would you choose and why?

"Damn it, how could you do that to me? How could you do that to me? That's impossible," he said. "I mean, listen—man, why would you do that? No, it's a fair question. It's a fair question.

"The only difference between the two shows is that there are ... many, many seasons of 'Doctor Who,' so I guess just for having more content to watch over a period of time I would maybe—I don't know but then, see, if I take 'Walking Dead' and I'm only allowed one thing then it reminds me that I've been in some kind of apocalypse basically watching a drama about the apocalypse.

"I don't know. But then I feel like if the TARDIS just popped up in Atlanta then the Doctor might find the source of the zombie-ism and cure all the walkers somehow. It's probably some sort of an alien virus that he could change the frequency with a sonic screwdriver and manipulate it and then cure everyone.

"You asked me an impossible question. How could you 'Sophie's Choice' me like that? How could you?! You bastard."

I guess it goes without saying, but Hardwick geeks out for both shows.

'THE HOST' STARS ARE READY TO GET FREAKY

TEAM ALIEN

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

Because their movie "The Host" comes from "Twilight" author Stephenie Meyer, Max Irons and Jake Abel have received plenty of questions about Team Edward and Team Jacob.

The new film's story, however, isn't as basic as, say, a love triangle involving a human, a werewolf and a vampire. The futuristic romance "The Host," opening Friday, centers on Melanie (Saoirse Ronan), a human whose body is infiltrated by a peaceful alien being. Jared (Irons) has eyes for Melanie; but when the alien takes over, Melanie becomes Wanda, a different personality that captivates Ian (Abel).

Got that?

At the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, 27-year-old Irons (son of Jeremy) and Abel, 25, talked about "The Host," aliens, and dangerous three-ways.

I know you guys went to Second City last night ...
Jake Abel: Yeah! He didn't 'cause he's an idiot.
Max Irons: I didn't because I'm professional. I like to be on point the next day.
Jake: Jerk. I went.

How difficult has it been traveling when each of you has such different perspectives—Max being professional and Jake being so amateur?
Max: I spend a lot of my time trying to drag him up to my level.
Jake: I'm a lot more fun. He sits in his room and tries to expand his brain.
Max: Education's a big deal.
Jake: Sitting in a bathtub watching television, crying to "Billy Elliott." How British of you!
Max: Yesterday I had a day where I found myself in the bath twice.
Jake: [Laughs.] That's why he didn't go to Second City, 'cause it was the second bath he had to take. That's why his skin looks so good.
Max: And then I watched "Billy Elliott," which is a film I haven't seen since I was a kid. I was crying like a baby 'cause that film ... the father-son relationship [affects me].
Jake: Meanwhile I was out eating deep-dish pizza, seeing Second City and taking in the city. Expanding myself that way.
Max: I did a bit of that too. But just punctuated with baths.
Jake: And Burberry.

even considered the concept of war.
Max: I spoke about that the other day.
Jake: Really?
Max: Yeah! In an interview. Glad you were paying attention. You'd think, if they could come this far, if they'd conquered the space travel, the intergalactic light speed travel thing, they must be able to destroy themselves. So the fact they haven't, the fact they've come that far, they must be peaceful.

Do you think a lot of people would be in favor of it, seeing how many problems we have now?
Jake: The rub is once they invade, we disappear. So we wouldn't even be here for it. We're essentially killed in a very peaceful manner.
Max: Probably the way to do it would be saying, "Hang on. Let's have a cup of tea, give us some tips, and then go on your merry way."

Maybe if we have a gigantic bath where we can all soothe ourselves together.
Jake: I think the bath is really the clincher in all of this. Is if we all bathe together more ...
Max: Really? OK.
Jake: We might find ourselves more harmonious.
Max: Maybe ...

If you were dating an alien, would you be more weirded out by knowing it was another species or by her being 1,000 years old?
Jake: Well, Ian, my character in the movie, does not care about what species you are. If you're smart and intelligent, which I guess comes from thousands of years of evolution ...
Max: I might be quite intimidated by 1,000 years.
Jake: I like older women.
Max: You do like older women.
Jake: The older the better. 1,000 years old? Forget about it.
Max: We had an actor on set who was—I'm just going to say it, William Hurt—who was quite fascinated and preoccupied. His mind, the first time we rehearsed with him, he was on quantum physics and this kind of thing. He really, really goes for it. But there was one thing he couldn't get past, which was he believed Ian's love for the alien, for Wanda, should actually extend into interspecies relations. And was quite preoccupied with how that would physically happen. So the little alien tentacly thing ...
Jake: "Would it grip?"
Max: "Would it grip?" That was one of his questions, I remember that. Yeah, he never quite got past that one.

Well, Saoirse was 17 I believe when you guys filmed ...
Jake: But 18 when we started kissing her. She had a birthday on set.

You're very quick to note that.
Jake: It's all very legal! [Laughs.]
Max: And her father and mother were on set at all times.

What do you think a double date would be like with Jared, Ian, Melanie and Wanda?
Jake: I think it would look like a threesome.
Max: Hang on, are they in their own bodies, Wanda and Melanie, or are they in the same body?

No, they're still in the same body.
Max: God, it'd be a nightmare. There's a minefield of problems.
Jake: Unless you're into that sort of thing.
Max: I don't think ...
Jake: Come on, Max.
Max: I might do most things, but there's a line there. The whole alien thing.
Jake: Oh. That's what weirds you out about that?
Max: Amongst other things.
Jake: [Laughs.]

I'm surprised you didn't attempt that solution at one point. "I love her. You love her. Melanie and Wanda are different; let's all hang out."
Jake: As long as we don't make eye contact, we're fine.
Max: Whoo!

What do you say to someone who sees "The Host" or reads about it and says the notion of two guys fighting over one girl who's possessed by an alien is ridiculous, and they don't get it?
Max: Um, give it a try. Don't be close-minded. Open yourselves up to new things, new ideas and new experiences.
Jake: Like an alien three-way.

MPAIS@TRIBUNE.COM | @MATTPAIS

Max: I did not go to Burberry.

How many people do you think, in a setting like "The Host," would say, "So aliens can end violence and hunger and save the environment? Bring it on; humanity is struggling"?
Max: The price tag of losing your soul and mind [is] fairly hefty.
Jake: Oddly enough, I took a bath last night too before bed.
Max: See.
Jake: We had televisions in the mirrors and I was watching a science show on some history channel or whatever, and they talked about this theory that if aliens were able to come to us they must be so advanced that they had either evolved past war—otherwise they would have destroyed themselves—or they'd never

The Host

Congratulations, Stephenie Meyer. You made something worse than "Twilight."

Adapted by suddenly terrible writer/director Andrew Niccol ("The Truman Show," "In Time") from Meyer's supposedly adult novel, "The Host" attempts to construct another chaste love triangle around a bland, largely inactive young woman (Saoirse Ronan) and the two dudes (Max Irons, Jake Abel) who brood over her/battle to kiss her in the rain. Big problems with that: The guys, Jared (Irons) and Ian (Abel), have roughly the same personality, and the girl, Melanie (Ronan), has been partially overtaken by an alien with its own personality—to the point that Jared's fond of Melanie but Ian has eyes for Wanda, the name used when Melanie's body succumbs to the extraterrestrial personality.

Inside their shared head, Melanie and Wanda constantly argue about the guys. For example: "What the hell, Wanda?" Maybe these four should just double date?

If you're confused and/or shocked by the stupidity of this "Invasion of the Body Snatchers"-lite situation, you should be. The first installment of a planned trilogy, "The Host" exists in a future that essentially is indistinguishable from any other cinematic vision. This world contains numerous shiny objects and dull outfits, and life has increased in efficiency but decreased in individuality. That's because the alien race, which looks like floating digital sperm when separated from human bodies, has overtaken humanity and created a planet at peace without any hunger or violence. You might say, "That could present an interesting dilemma: Is the Earth better off this way? Would some humans voluntarily submit to the aliens, who appear to do people no harm, because of what they've done to society?"

The humorless "The Host," however, addresses none of these complexities and at times seems like a result of a galactic misunderstanding. The resistance (which also includes William Hurt as Melanie's uncle) stands up to the "seekers" (led by Diane Kruger) without considering any gray area to the situation. The aliens have invented many powerful sprays for purposes such as healing and cleaning, but they can neither fly nor effectively defend themselves from a human's punch. So maybe these creatures, discernible in humans only because of their sharp blue eyes, aren't so talented after all. Regardless, get ready for some hot interspecies kissing!

All bleak atmosphere and no story, "Everybody Has a Plan" proves that a film that can in fact be dull enough to waste not one but two roles for the usually engaging Viggo Mortensen.

Viggo Mortensen in 'Everybody Has a Plan'

The actor ("A History of Violence," "Lord of the Rings") plays Agustin, a Buenos Aires pediatrician who's tired of his work and marriage for extremely vague reasons. When his identical twin brother, Pedro (also played by Mortensen), diagnosed with terminal cancer, turns up and asks Agustin to put him out of his misery, the doctor assumedly recalls the plotlines of his favorite telenovelas and decides to pose as Pedro after doing what his brother asks.

Here's a question, Agustin: Is Pedro's life really better? After saying you're no longer interested in adopting a baby, you bail on your job and wife (Soledad Villamil) to try your hand at beekeeping while occasionally being threatened by the goons looking for Pedro's missing partner in crime. I know you're happy to cozy up to your bro's 20-year-old assistant (Sofia Gala) who thinks you're Pedro, but you could just go somewhere you don't have to spend your entire life maintaining a ruse.

Mortensen almost always contains layers when little happens around him, but writer-director Ana Piterbarg provides few dimensions to the characters and labors to stretch a short story into two hours of well-rendered mood and poorly told exposition. Her attempt to use bees as a metaphor for people, on the other hand, is as gentle as a hive falling on your head—which at least would deliver more excitement than people routinely gazing at old photographs and hoping the gaps will be filled in.

I don't know the last time I rooted against main characters as much as I did Malcolm (Ty Hickson) and Sofia (Tashiana Washington), New York graffiti artists scheming to tag the giant apple at Citi Field. They're thieves whose priorities are so out of whack that even when Malcolm declares his love after meeting Ginnie (Zoe Lescaze) during a pot delivery, he still wants to break into her house and steal jewelry to help his cause. Somehow writer-director Adam Leon's debut feature won a prize at SXSW. He may know the streets of NYC, but he also promotes robbery and can't be serious in expecting us to care whether Malcolm and Sofia become more than friends. You'll just hope they get caught.

'From Up on Poppy Hill'

PG

Based on the jolly, jazzy score that keeps "From Up on Poppy Hill" lively, the latest from Studio Ghibli ("Howl's Moving Castle") appears to have missed its calling as a Broadway musical. Seemingly every 10 minutes, one of the actors (Anton Yelchin, Aubrey Plaza and Christina Hendricks) tasked with dubbing the Japanese-animated film into English will bust out into song.

Lame, hypothetical lyrics (to the tune of any generic musical theater number): "I'm up! On Poppy Hill. I'm up! And ain't it a thrill ..."

It ain't a thrill, but the film, co-adapted by legend Hayao Miyazaki ("Spirited Away") from a Japanese comic and directed by Miyazaki's son Goro, gets by for a while on a story with more humor and engagement than recent Ghibli disappointments ("The Secret World of Arriety," "Ponyo"). In 1963 Yokohama, Japan, teenage Umi (Sarah Bolger of "In America") cooks and does laundry for the family members and boarders living at her grandma's house, barely finding time to go to school. She's one of many who have eyes for Shun (Yelchin) after he jumps off the roof to protest the potential closing of the building that houses many extracurricular clubs. Seriously, the guy can't change a light bulb without a crowd of girls giggling, and when he says he cut his hand shaving—who does that?—some young ladies coo, "He shaves!"

Then "Poppy Hill" takes an unfortunate turn when elaborate secrets throw the main characters' family histories into question. (Hint: It's a time-worn dilemma, recently seen in "Incendies" and "People Like Us"). "It's like a cheap melodrama," Shun says, and he's right. Plus, the ultimate resolution ignores the previous awkwardness of the situation and serves as a convenient solution to a major issue regarding how teenagers handle their feelings.

The Miyazakis, at least in Karey Kirkpatrick's ("The Spiderwick Chronicles") adaptation of the script, fail to connect the approaching Tokyo Olympics with the local push to dispose of anything old. It's also the latest film to paraphrase the quote, lodged in my mind tied to "Magnolia," about people unprepared to let go of a past that's not ready to let go of them either.

It doesn't make the statement less true, but when a film's occasional charms eventually slide away, its frustrations tend to linger longer than its highlights.

The Sapphires

The recent, terrible Dwayne Johnson vehicle "Snitch" was "inspired by a true story," which merely meant the U.S. has controversial drug enforcement policies and the movie was something that hypothetically could happen as a result. Also "inspired by a true story," the entertaining but thin musical drama "The Sapphires" stems from something significant and more concrete: A group of Australian aboriginal women, having only received full human rights a year earlier in 1967, travel to Vietnam to perform for American troops. The film is adapted from the play by co-writer Tony Briggs, the son of one of those real-life women.

As a determinedly feel-good movie, "The Sapphires," which won several Australian awards and earned a 10-minute standing ovation last year at Cannes, grooves on great music but struggles with conflict. A trio of sisters, including young mom Julie (Australian pop star Jessica Mauboy), boy-crazy Cynthia (Miranda Tapsell) and uptight Gail (Deborah Mailman, who appeared in the "Sapphires" stage production), compete in a singing contest but lose due to racial bias. Dave (Chris O'Dowd of "This is 40"), the event's boozing emcee whose favorite phrase is "sweet tits," sees the gals' potential. After their cousin Kay (Shari Sebbens) very quickly overcomes her embarrassment toward her darker-skinned family, the quartet becomes The Sapphires, with Dave, a soul music hound with a howling voice himself, on board as manager and keyboard player.

"Can you make it sound blacker?" Dave asks after the group, mostly containing country music fans, delivers an extremely tame take on "I Heard It Through the Grapevine." O'Dowd is hilarious in the movie, and much of the film's energy comes from his humor and effort to harness his new partners' talents into something marketable. Aside from the whole war zone element, the danger of which director Wayne Blair doesn't handle well, "The Sapphires" strongly recalls everything from "Dreamgirls" (Julie replaces Gail as lead singer, to big sis's chagrin) to "Almost Famous" to last year's tremendous "Not Fade Away."

Note: This doesn't harm the music a bit.

Mauboy has one hell of a voice, and the Sapphires' vocal performances speak to the endless power of great soul songs. Yet Blair treats racism and the war experience very gently, and romantic business between Dave and one of the sisters is a contrived distraction. I also wish "The Sapphires" didn't lazily mention at the end that the real women, depicted as determined music stars-in-the-making, ultimately opted not to pursue music. After all that effort? Why not?

SHINING BRIGHT

'AUSTRALIAN IDOL' RUNNER-UP JESSICA MAUBOY BRINGS SPARKLE TO 'THE SAPPHIRES'

TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/TRIBUNE

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

Trivia time: Name two "Idol" runners-up who went on to sell boatloads of albums and earn major awards for starring in a film about 1960s female soul singers. One, of course, is Chicago-native Jennifer Hudson ("Dreamgirls"). The other is Australian singer Jessica Mauboy, who has gone platinum in her country after participating in the reality TV singing competition, recorded with American rappers including Snoop Dogg and Ludacris and won the Australian Film Institute's best supporting actress award for "The Sapphires," opening Friday in Chicago.

In the fact-based film, Mauboy plays Julie, whose knockout voice proves a major asset as she, her older sisters and cousin—aboriginal women who had earned full human rights a year earlier in 1967—tour Vietnam and perform for American troops.

At the House of Blues, the 23-year-old talked about co-star Chris O'Dowd's voice and crossing over to America.

On co-star Chris O'Dowd's voice [The "Bridesmaids" star plays Sapphires manager/collaborator Dave Lovelace]: My goodness, I didn't even know Chris could sing. ... We actually were thinking I needed to get him in the studio; we wanted to lay something down.

On appropriately covering classic material That was really, really important to me that I didn't over-sing because these songs are such legendary songs that were perfect that don't need to be covered.

On bringing the soul in the studio to suit performances she's seen before It was really visualizing those four aboriginal women singing to the soldiers. Giving them hope. Giving them belief. Giving them back their soul. Giving them voice and just letting go a little bit.

On her own barriers to success I've had that experience of someone saying, 'I don't know if she's going to go that far.' There hasn't been that many indigenous Australians who have made it in the pop industry.

On aboriginal people fighting for rights in the late '60s I was so happy being a 23-year-old and getting the opportunity of telling my uncle and auntie's story, what they went through, what I was educated on. But being able to tell it to the next generation was something I wanted to do and be a part of telling.

On performing in local pubs when she was younger, just like her character does I was 11 at the time, singing up against 30-year-olds. But that was our thing; that was our community hangout. My parents would take us to the pubs and bars and we would hang out with the family. That was our environment.

On working with Snoop Dogg Snoop was definitely so genuine and so supportive. He had heard the song ['Get 'Em Girls'] that I worked on with [producer] Bangladesh in Atlanta, and he wanted to be on board and loves Australia and loved that I was an indigenous Australian ... When he walked up to the [video] shoot, he had his uncle that came along in a trailer and cooked us chicken. [Laughs]

Wrong
NR

Though the film co-stars Alexis Dziena and William Fichtner, "Wrong" probably won't be confused with the upcoming "Entourage" movie. (Don't know those names? Dziena played E's girlfriend Ashley, and Fichtner played Drama advocate/"Johnny's Bananas" producer Phil Yagoda).

In "Wrong," Dziena plays a pizza chain employee willing to leave her husband for a guy she falls for on the phone; Fichtner plays Master Chang, a ponytailed, Dr. Evil-accented expert on telepathically talking to dogs who kidnaps pets to help their owners better appreciate them. "I only realized I loved my face after it had been burned with acid," notes Master Chang, supporting his "don't know what you got till it's gone" philosophy.

Not coincidentally, Dolph (Jack Plotnick), who's gone to work for the last three months despite being fired, loses his beloved pooch, Paul, and tries to get him back. He also counsels his gardener, Victor (Eric Judor), who poses as Dolph to sleep with Emma (Dziena), on a palm tree that has mysteriously become a pine tree.

This brand of bizarre should be no surprise for anyone who saw writer-director Quentin Dupieux's 2010 comedy-thriller "Rubber," which featured a killer tire who could explode animals and human heads with its, uh, mind. Where Dupieux spent most of "Rubber" applauding his own cleverness, he keeps "Wrong" rolling from one amusingly odd bit to another. A fireman texts while a van burns just a few feet away. Water constantly rains on indifferent employees inside Dolph's office. Dolph's friend Mike (Regan Burns) drives as far as he can and thinks he's reached the end of the world. "Oh," Dolph says when the two re-connect by phone. "Do you like it?"

With the surreal "Wrong," Dupieux again treats characters and, by extension, life's nonsense with a shrug. Still, it's a lot easier to like a stunt when a filmmaker brings more than one idea to a movie, even if those ideas have nothing to do with each other.

PIECE OF MIND

How do the slices stack up at three new pizzerias?

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

The saying "You can never have too much of a good thing," applies to a lot of things in my book, but pizza might be number one. In my mind, you can never A) order too much pizza, B) have too many leftovers to eat the next day or C) have too many options when it comes to crust and toppings. A trio of new pizzerias have fired up their ovens this month, so in the more-is-more spirit of excess, I visited all three in one week.

PIZZA HOUSE NO. 1647

1647 W. Cortland St. 773-252-3500

Look for: The gigantic wooden door under Pizza House's sign, which you inevitably will try to open before realizing it isn't actually the entrance . That'd be the door to the left of the storefront, which is tucked between Cortland's Garage and Jane's just west of where I-90 crosses over Ashland Avenue in Bucktown. "I always admired this little strip of Cortland because it's really the gateway to Bucktown," said owner Bobby Paladino, who is no stranger to the neighborhood (he owns Club Lucky) or the pizza business, having opened O'Fame back in the '80s.

Best for: Bucktown couples sick of take-and-bake from Homemade Pizza Co. The restaurant is counter-service and its layout is especially well suited for duos, with a few larger tables up front leading into a long line of tables for two. It's also a good option for seekers of healthier pizza; thin and double-crust pizzas are made with whole-wheat dough that's surprisingly light. The menu says that no more than four ingredients are recommended, and I can see why—the delicate crust easily could become waterlogged if overloaded with too many veggies. In the mood for something heartier, I preferred the cheesier, white-flour Sicilian-style pizza that's available by the slice ($2-$3) with topping combos such as artichoke and kalamata olives and pepperoni with giardiniera.

Loved it: Frosted beer mugs. Because Pizza House doesn't have a liquor license yet (Paladino expects it within 10 days or so), these tall, icy beauties were brought to the table for a round of Sprecher cream soda; however, I could imagine them filled with Stella Artois and Bell's amber ale once the kegs are hooked up. In the meanwhile, it's BYOB. Also coming soon: Lunch hours (in a few weeks) and delivery service (this fall).

Hated it: The size of small pizzas, which are almost comically small at 8 inches. For $12.20 with three toppings, they're the same price as larger 10- or 12-inch pies at plenty of other pizzerias, and those extra bucks will be a sticking point for some. To avoid the soggy middle phenomenon, pizzas don't come larger than 12 inches ($11.95 for cheese only up to $15.70 for three toppings), so groups will want to order multiples. With sausages made in house, I also had high hopes for the Italian sausage, but it could use a little more punch—more fennel, chili, pepper, something. Maybe I should have tried the turkey sausage, which Paladino said also is house-made and flavored with sage.

Bottom line: When wine and beer are added, it'll make a great low-key date night for Bucktowners, but it's not quite yet a pizza destination.

Thin Crust Pizza with sausage, peppers, and onions at Pizza House.

The Knife and Forkner at Homeslice

HOMESLICE

938 W. Webster St. 312-789-4600

Look for: The triangular logo with a towering evergreen tree that conveniently also looks like a slice of pizza. Thanks to stacked log booths and tree-trunk tables made from Oregon Douglas fir, the decor in this Lincoln Park pizzeria is so foresty it almost deserves its own name—Timberiffic? Logalicious? Woodtastic? It makes more sense when you find out that the hand-tossed, stone-baked pizzas are inspired by an Oregon pizzeria that the owners loved during their time living there, though they're staying tight-lipped about its name.

Best for: Anyone who loves piling tons of stuff on their pizza. You can build your own 10-, 14- or 18-inch pizza, but Homeslice has 31 suggestions, all named after the owners or people they know. Co-owner Clay Hamilton was making his rounds to each table just after I ordered the Clay Bacon, which piles chicken, bacon, diced roma tomatoes, onions and a three-cheese blend (provolone, mozzarella and cheddar) atop a base of ranch sauce—to crazy delicious results. On the veggie side, the Natelicious (named for the designer behind the map-style menu) combines artichoke hearts, roasted red peppers, caramelized onions and roasted garlic cloves with the briny saltiness of capers and kalamata olives. The bubbly, golden-edged crust is sturdy enough to support the weight of all those toppings. Prices start at $8 for the small cheese pizza and top out around $32 for large specialty pies; my four friends and I ordered five small pies and had zero leftovers.

Loved it: The sweet-as-pie server who took care of my table. Opening weekend buzz combined with March Madness resulted in crushing crowds, but she took the time to explain the menu and make sure we had any condiments we could possibly want—from a big bottle of sriracha to some seriously delicious made-from-scratch ranch sauce for crust-dipping. She also kept the drinks coming. Though there's a solid lineup of beers both draft and canned (with cute logo-clad koozies for the latter), by the end of the night, everyone at my table was drinking Moscow mules ($9) served in traditional copper mugs that matched the round copper lights dangling above us. And the restrooms, which are tiled with thousands of pennies, beg to be Instagrammed.

Hated it: Lincoln Park stereotypes come to life, from a rowdy suit-clad guy letting off steam after work to moms who sent their pre-teen sons outside to play basketball while they nursed glasses of wine. On the other hand, the vibe is less college than neighboring sports bars State and McGee's; the TVs behind the bar will only be turned on for major sporting events (March Madness applies) to keep the focus on conversation.

Bottom line: Homeslice is the best thing to hit this strip of Webster Avenue since Jam 'n' Honey's gigantic jars of Nutella. Lucky for DePaul students and anyone working within walking distance, lunch service with by-the-slice options ($3-$4) just launched this week.

THE SQUARED CIRCLE

2418 N. Ashland Ave. 773-904-8170

Look for: TVs airing professional wrestling seen through the front windows. Just north of the Ashland-Fullerton-Clybourn intersection in Lincoln Park, this pizza is the pride and joy of Lisa Marie Varon, aka TNA wrestler Tara, and it's named for the wrestling ring where all the action goes down. With walls covered in wood planks and shadowbox frames displaying autographed wrestling photos and sequined costumes, it's a little sauna-meets-wrestling hall of fame, but at least the sports allegiance is clear.

Best for: Those in multi-crust-ial relationships. If you like your pizza thin but hang out with devotees of deep-dish and hand-tossed, you can all come to peace here. Varon's husband, Lee, presides over the brick oven and draws on his experience from Fat Tony's, the couple's former Louisville pizzeria, to toss and press out crispy, bubbly thin-crust pizzas as well as what they call "traditional," with a crust similar in thickness to a New York-style slice. Thin pizzas are sliced in squares and the traditional in triangular slices, but both are available in 12-inch and 20-inch sizes ($10-$30). Though Lee will tell you that the pizza's best fresh from the oven, carryout also is offered and delivery is in the plans for later this year.

Loved it: Lisa Marie Varon, who excitedly chatted up her customers while working a hot pink baseball cap and shirt that matched the streaks in her hair. When I asked her if the blue cheese-prosciutto-apple pizza called Lisa Marie was her go-to, she admitted that even though Lee named it after her, she couldn't possibly play favorites. I definitely dug its sweet-salty flavor and the sprinkle of arugula on top. I also tried the Kentucky Bourbon, a creative take on a barbecue pizza with dollops of creamy mashed potato and chunks of pork, which satisfied in a this-is-weird-but-good kind of way. There's also a solid beer list (including cans of Two Brothers' new American pale ale, Sidekick) and $5 milkshakes in flavors such as roasted marshmallow and peanut butter-banana.

Hated it: The bar's namesake pizza, The Squared Circle, also called the Duck Fat Deep Dish. Cooked in square pans greased with duck fat, these pies have a golden exterior and a fluffy, light interior, but the unorthodox shape creates super-thick corners that are overwhelmingly bready, especially in the small 8-inch size ($14 plus $1.25 per topping) I ordered. It's too bad, because the sauce—Lisa Marie's family recipe—has a great zing to it, as do chunks of hand-pinched sausage. Maybe the 12-inch large ($22 plus $2 per topping) might be more balanced? Either way, heads up that, like most deep-dish pies, these take about 35-40 minutes to bake.

Bottom line: The small bar tucked in the back between the restrooms and the kitchen doesn't make for a great hangout vibe, but what The Squared Circle lacks in ambience it makes up for in decent slices and friendly service.

FIVE THINGS YOU NEED TO KEEP ON YOUR RADAR

LENNY GILMORE/REDEYE

Siena Tavern 51 W. Kinzie St. 312-595-1322
A quiet date spot it isn't, but this bumping River North restaurant combines a see-and-be-seen vibe with tasty Italian dishes, plus the prettiest coupes for bubbly and cocktails.

HILARY HIGGINS/REDEYE

Ajoomah's Apron
219 W. Cermak Road 773-326-2800
Head to this Korean restaurant in Chinatown with a bottle or two of booze (it's BYOB with no corkage fee) and prepare to leave with leftovers—they're highly likely thanks to the generously portioned entrees.

Brewstone Beer Company
414 N. Orleans St. 312-464-9456
This casual bar and restaurant, which also has locations in Indianapolis and Pittsburgh, opened last week in River North with a menu of burgers, flatbreads and pastas plus more than 30 beers on tap, including local picks from Goose Island and Revolution. On Friday nights between 9 and 10 p.m., a sponsored social hour means complimentary full pours of 15 rotating drafts, plus $4 pints the rest of the night. Buckeyes take note—it's also an official Ohio State bar.

Avec
615 W. Randolph St. 312-377-2002
The West Loop restaurant known for its small plates and wine list has added two seasonal cocktails to its bar repertoire. The $10 creations are both gin-based—the first is a riff on a negroni made with an Italian aperitif and sweet vermouth, and the second shakes gin with a Spanish vermouth, Aperol, lemon juice and orange liqueur. Both should help make the inevitable wait for a table much more bearable.

Vu Sua
2925 N. Halsted St. 773-360-8816
The Lincoln Park space that housed longtime restaurant Erwin is now this week-old Asian-inspired restaurant. Say it like this: voo-swah.

Lumineers among leaked Lolla lineup

Chicago Tribune

The Cure and Nine Inch Nails will join previously confirmed acts Mumford & Sons, the Killers, Phoenix, Vampire Weekend, the National and the Postal Service at Lollapalooza in Grant Park on Aug. 2-4.

Multiple industry sources confirmed Thursday that a picture of a Lollapalooza poster that leaked online Wednesday night was legitimate. Lollapalooza spokeswoman Shelby Meade would not comment on the leaked lineup, but said official confirmation of the actual lineup would come next week with a new on-sale date for single-day tickets (three-day tickets already have sold out).

Great GoogaMooga festival in talks for Chicago offshoot

By Kate Bernot
REDEYE

Oh, you thought Lollapalooza was a strange festival name? Prepare for Great GoogaMooga.

The hybrid food and music festival, which debuted last year in Brooklyn's Prospect Park, is in talks with the city of Chicago to bring a version of its weekend-long festival to Montrose Beach.

While Superfly, the entertainment company that produces Brooklyn's GoogaMooga, "cannot confirm" a Chicago offshoot, the Park District said it is in talks with organizers.

Chicago Park District permit records show that Jam Entertainment, the company that orchestrates Beer Hoptacular, has applied for 44 event permits for Montrose Beach and the surrounding area for dates ranging from Aug. 18-Aug. 28.

Tressa Feher, chief of staff for alderman James Cappleman, whose 46th Ward includes the area around Montrose Beach, said the alderman's office was aware the festival was considering that location for a summer event.

Chatter within Chicago's culinary community indicates that the festival is a done deal. In NYC, the May 17-19 festival will feature 175 beers and wines, plus musical headliners Yeah Yeah Yeahs, The Flaming Lips and Matt & Kim, as well as big-name restaurant and food vendors such as Colicchio & Sons, Eataly and Momofuku Milk Bar.

Thus far, the potential Chicago lineup of musical acts and chefs has not been released.

Can I support gay marriage but not marriage in general?

Dear Anna,
Is it possible to support same-sex marriage at the same time that I don't support marriage in general? I respect and love my gay friends and certainly wouldn't want to deny them any of their rights, but I've never believed in marriage as an institution, and I find myself at odds. —Confused but Hopeful

Anna Pulley
» redeyedating@gmail.com
» @annapulley

Dear Confused,
For those of you who have missed all the hullabaloo and the red equality signs on Facebook and Twitter, the Supreme Court has been hearing two gay rights cases this week: Proposition 8 and the Defense of Marriage Act. The outcomes may dramatically affect the rights of gay people. Most notably it will affect my willingness to keep buying straight people bath towels for their weddings. Seriously, people. The gays have stocked your closets! Won't you let us come out of ours?

That said, you absolutely can hold both beliefs. You can be against marriage as a concept but in favor of equality, which is really what this issue is about anyway. Marriage is almost a red herring at this point. What's really being argued is why gay people, who are tax-paying citizens of the U.S., are being denied equal protection under the law.

The 14th Amendment, you'll remember from high school civics class, is why schools aren't allowed to be racially segregated, and why an Asian can marry a Latino (or any interracial combination) without, like, Armageddon happening.

Same-sex marriage supporters rally in front of the Supreme Court on Wednesday. GETTYIMAGES

You can want to support your queer friends and loved ones, but also find it strange that there are 1,000+ benefits married people gain from the simple act of saying "I do." I certainly do. And I wish there was a better way to get things like Social Security benefits, health insurance, immigration privileges, child rearing benefits and hospital rights without the yoke of the marriage contract, but sadly, that's not the reality in which we currently live.

Many queer people feel the same way that you do and are conflicted on the issue of marriage (my own girlfriend doesn't believe in marriage)—but if SCOTUS decides to kill DOMA and Proposition 8, it's not going to impinge on anyone's right to NOT get married if they don't want to. No one's going to tie tin cans to your Chevy while you sleep or sign you up for a registry at CB2.

So in short, yes, feel free to rail against the heteronormative, patriarchal, outdated institution of marriage. Just make sure you do so while also waving a tiny rainbow flag and wearing a sombrero. You know, just to keep things interesting.

How to recover from a mood-killing moment

The Date Report

Sex. It can be such a fragile thing. Put off because you're not in the mood. Treated thoughtlessly because you're in a rut. Derailed for any number of reasons: a broken condom ... a tummy in turmoil ... self-consciousness over an unshaved bikini line or a bloated belly.

But can sex be saved? Can you salvage your sexual experience even if you're feeling hopelessly distracted, or have been hard core humiliated?

The short answer: Maybe. Here are some suggestions for finding your way back to The Moment:

For when your mom calls:

Your guy is giving your breasts some much-needed attention. The phone starts ringing. You try desperately to ignore it. Finally, the answering machine clicks on and your mom starts talking about how you should call the dermatologist and get that mole on your hand checked out. Thanks, Mom. This is another one of those situations where you need to just block out the distractions, maybe have a laugh, and just hump your way past that awkward moment.

For when you find yourself condom-less:

When things are going hot and heavy after a fabulous night out, you ask him to pull out a condom, and he responds with a glassy-eyed stare, things can quickly screech to a halt. This is one of those situations in which we recommend a session of Everything But (as in, everything but sex). There's a lot of fun to be had without the regular ol' in-and-out.

For when you pull a hamstring:

I hate it when that happens. But once the initial agony passes, there's opportunity here. If you pull a hammy, you could always give your partner a sultry look (after you've stopped wincing with pain) and request a massage. Having your partner knead that sore muscle could quickly turn into full-body erotic massages for the both of you, taking your sex session in a delightful direction it may not have gone otherwise.

Use an important middle-school game to plan your celebrity romance

DRAW SWIRL HERE

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

The people have spoken! Well, the readers of Details, at least. The mag featured its list of the most, um, bangable male and female celebs in its April issue, and there are some pretty hot options to be sure. But you know what's even hotter than fantasizing about your own celeb hookup that—sorry to burst your bubble—will never happen? Going even further with it and using MASH, that game you used to play in middle school, to determine your entire future with the person. So pick your gender of choice and get it on!*

If you don't remember how do to this, have a friend draw a swirl until you say STOP. Then, count the number of lines; that's how many rotations you use per round before crossing off another option. When you only have one option left per category, this is the story of your future.*

HOT DATE

MAY 14 That's when Taylor Swift will appear in the season finale of "New Girl," billboard.com reports. T-Swizzle will play an "important guest" at Cece and Shivrang's wedding.

Madonna's MDNA Tour has given the pop icon a new name: billionaire. The tour alone, the New York Post reports, earned the Material Girl more than $305 million, with merchandise sales and TV and DVD rights adding another $85 million.

More glitter!

Ke$ha

In between reapplying her face sequins and cartwheeling across the stage, Ke$ha found time to film an MTV docuseries, "Ke$ha: My Crazy Beautiful Life," which premiers at 10 p.m. April 23. In the trailer posted on mtv.com, the pop star very seriously declares, "This is the only thing I was put on this earth to do." Presumably she's talking about the importance of whiskey shots and glitter cannons.

It's a girl!

Kristen Bell and Dax Shepard are parents! "Lincoln Bell Shepard is here," Shepard tweeted Thursday. "She has mom's beauty and dad's obsession with breasts. Hooray!" Lincoln is the first child for the engaged couple.

No Willie style

"Independence Day" put Will Smith on the Hollywood A-list, but director Roland Emmerich told Entertainment Weekly that Smith is too big a name for the planned sequels. "It would be a Will Smith movie," he said. " 'Independence Day' was always a group thing."

"EVERYONE AT THE TIME WAS LIKE, 'YOU'RE SO LUCKY' ... BUT I THOUGHT IT WAS DISGUSTING."

—Kirsten Dunst, in Bullet magazine, on her kiss with Brad Pitt in the 1994 film "Interview With the Vampire." She was 11 at the time.
